

THE INTERIOR JOURNAL.

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1872.

Harmony.

Parties, no less than families, should harmonize. Aspirants for office, belonging to the same party, should never permit any feelings of hatred or revenge to enter their minds. No good can ever come of it. Men have been found, for the sake of making or trying to make, a little personal glory or success, to indulge in secret machinations against their opponents. We sincerely trust that during the canvass which is now being so vigorously pressed by several gallant gentlemen, all of them worthy and well qualified, no unfair or unprincipled resource will be brought to bear by either of them in his efforts to obtain the nomination at the hands of his party. In other words let harmony prevail all along our ranks, and it will be far better for us in the end. We undertake to say now, that so far as our paper is concerned, its columns shall never be opened to any unfair dealing on the part of any politician, and if we find any of them seeking unfairly, to promote himself, we intend to turn our backs upon him.

Hon. Geo. R. McKee.

We do hope that the convention which meets in Lexington on the 22nd of May, to nominate a candidate for the appellate judgeship on the Democratic ticket; will unanimously accord the position to Hon. Geo. R. McKee, of Garrard county. Judge McKee is a lawyer of fine ability, a sober, honest man, and one whose decisions would reflect credit upon the books of reports made by our supreme court of Kentucky. Connected by blood with many of the first men of learning in our State; with long years of experience as a lawyer, we know that the convention would honor itself by nominating him.

Casey County Specimen.

The Democrats of Casey county, met in convention at Liberty on the 22nd of this month, to appoint delegates to the Appellate Convention which will convene in Lexington, 29th of May next. The meeting unanimously instructed their delegates to cast the vote of Casey county, for Hon. George R. McKee, of Garrard county, as their choice for Appellate Judge. Casey county people know the fine ability of Judge McKee, and are willing and anxious to see him promoted to this high and important position. We hope that every county where Judge McKee is known, will endorse him in the convention, for we are satisfied that no Kentuckian is more worthy of such promotion than he is.

The speech of Mr. Clay.

The speech of Mr. Clay, will be found in full in our paper to-day, by special request of many of our subscribers. As all who read it will form their own conclusions, we shall not make any comments further than we made last week. It is needless to say that some parts of this speech we do not endorse or approve; but in the main, it is an able and dignified exposition of "men and measures." It will repay all of our readers to give it a careful perusal.

The Richmond Branch Railroad.

The Richmond Register is down on their railroad, four fifths of the freight are wagoned, it being cheaper and faster. We clip the above from one of our exchanges. What is the matter with the railroad? We have heard a great many complaints of a similar kind, and where there is so much complaint, there must be some ground for it. The people of Garrard and Madison counties expended their thousands of dollars, believing that they would get a first class road, and having done so, they are certainly entitled to have a good road, well managed. We hope those in authority will see to it, that no useless delays are made in running trains over this or any other of these lines.

Fire at Lebanon.

Lebanon seems to be particularly unfortunate in being visited by disastrous fires. We learn from the Standard, that last Saturday morning, fire broke out in the drinking saloon of T. C. Harris, on the north side of main street. Opinion differs as to the origin of the fire, some attributing it to accident, others to the agency of an incendiary. Total loss estimated at from $12,000 to $15,000, on which there was only $800 insurance. Within the past twenty-six months Lebanon has had ten fires, loss not less than $109,000. The organization of a fire company is the topic of conversation among the business men of Lebanon at present.

Gov. Leslie has committed the mistake of commencing the death sentence of two murderers, Shannahan and Cannally, to imprisonment for life. Ah! Governor, we had hoped of you better things—Mayville Eagle.

We do not agree with the sentiment of the Eagle's editor. Gov. Leslie did just what any man having the power, and whose heart and mind are just and right, would have done. We hope the day is not far distant, when the laws of our country, in every State, will frown upon this barbarous punishment of a "life for a life." No, Mr. Green, Gov. Leslie has made no mistake, especially in this case referred to, and an approving conscience, with a humane public, will applaud his exercise of commencing power.

We are informed by a gentleman, just from Page's that Colonel John G. Craddock, editor of the True Kentuckian, is about to slip his heavy head into the matrimonial noose. It is to be hoped this is true, as Craddock has been laboring faithfully for twenty-eight years to marry, though constantly swearing that wasn't a woman in the world he would have—Hartsville Commercial.

Democratic Meeting in Casey.

At a meeting of the Democracy of Casey county, Kentucky, held at the court house in Liberty on Monday, April 22d, 1872. On motion of Col. F. L. Wolford, Maj. G. W. Sweeney was called to the chair and W. L. Burdett was appointed secretary. The object of the meeting as stated by the chairman in a brief and eloquent address, was to select delegates to meet with the convention to be held at Lexington, Kentucky, on the 29th day of May 1872, for the purpose of selecting a candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals in the Second Appellate District of Kentucky.

On motion of J. B. Stone the Chair appointed a committee of five to draft resolutions—John D. Page, J. B. Stone, W. F. Napier, F. W. Roy and John D. Cabell were appointed to the committee. Whilst the committee were absent, Hon. Jos. E. Hays, of Jamestown, addressed the people on the political issues of the day, and spoke of the race for Congress in our District; said he had but little faith in conventions; thinks it would be better to get the aspirants all together and throw hands and tails for a candidate; he stated that he was not a candidate. His remarks were listened to with attention by the large crowd present. He made a good sound Democratic speech.

The committee on resolutions reported the following which were unanimously adopted: Whereas, The Democratic State Central Committee have issued a call upon the counties of the Second Appellate District to appoint delegates to a convention to be held at Lexington, Kentucky, on the 29th day of May, 1872. Therefore, Resolved, That the Democracy of Casey county do approve of said call.

Resolved, That the Democracy of Casey county, in convention assembled having the greatest confidence in the integrity and legal ability of the Hon. George R. McKee, of Garrard county, do most cordially recommend him to the voters of the Second Appellate District. The delegates from this convention are hereby instructed to cast the vote of this county for him, and use every honorable means for his nomination.

Resolved, That the Democracy of Casey county, do hereby endorse the call of the Democracy of Casey county, for Hon. George R. McKee, of Garrard county, as their choice for Appellate Judge. Casey county people know the fine ability of Judge McKee, and are willing and anxious to see him promoted to this high and important position. We hope that every county where Judge McKee is known, will endorse him in the convention, for we are satisfied that no Kentuckian is more worthy of such promotion than he is.

On motion the meeting then adjourned. G. W. SWEENEY, Ch'n. W. L. BURDETT, Sec'y.

Hustonsville.

We extract the following from the Franklin Patriot, from the pen of "their own correspondent." "The village is evidently one who can appreciate the beautiful, the cultivated, the generous and the hospitable, and pays a just tribute to the memory of an 'honest pioneer,' whom the people of that portion of our country remember with emotions of reverence."

The next day, in due course by train and stage, I arrived at Hustonsville, in which town and vicinity I spent some days, the happiest and most thoroughly enjoyed of my life. Sitting like a gem in the emerald valley, this sequestered hamlet is surrounded by every beauty that the prolific hand of nature can bestow. Girdled by the hills whose rugged outlines are clear out upon the sky of Italian alps, whose sides are visted out with umbrageous ailes and around whose feet the limpid waters of a thousand rivulets rush babbled to the vale; this place looks like the retreat prepared for some colony of eremites, of whom the world is not worthy to pass long days of pleasure and righteousness under the smile of an approving heaven; or to the more sentimental mind, it is a fairy nook, removed from the jar of the highway and in the turmoil of the crowded thoroughfare, where youth and happiness and love might build grottoes and dwell in peace, growing old together, and gently following the decline of the way of life to sleep at last, "together at the foot." To a some thus aided by the artist hand of nature there was lent to my eye the lens which memory and reverence hold before the vision, far here the bones of my ancestors and the "rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep." Into this paradise are yet the moonlight tracks were effaced from the hillside, the form of Alex Blain in the majesty of honest nature, walked one of the pioneers. The "Old Stone House" is still seen, the monument of early backwoods magnificence. Near it, in the green sward of the meadow, a mouldering stone is the only monument left by the decay of nature and the tooth of time to bear witness of the gentle and true life that was ended here.

His name is fast fading from the minds of men, and will soon be swallowed up in that oblivion which remorselessly devours the memory of the just, and mercifully obliterated the memory of the malefactor. I was pleased to hear that he is, however, not yet quite forgotten, and his deeds "yet blossom in the dust," for on many a lip I heard the praise of those "works which followed him" when he was gathered to his rest.

The open-handed and free-hearted hospitality which is infallibly the characteristic of a chivalric people, and which in this valley of Kentucky has descended from the fathers, unimpaired to this generation, is still the rule of life, and has to be borne burden of happy, happy memories of sparkling hospitable hearts and glowing tables, of lamps ablaze, "over fair woman and brave men," of "soft eyes looking love to eyes which speak again."

Long may gentle peace, like a dove, spread wings of joy and happiness over this "Valley of the bluest."

A Card.

Minneapolis, April 25, 1872. Editor Interior Journal: I write this to say that I am satisfied that every aspirant, now out for Congress in our district, is willing to abide the action of the party in any mode of adjustment that may be adopted, whether by a primary election or District convention. And I hereby urge, as I have in my circular, the adoption of the primary election mode of adjustment for the reasons already assigned. Respectfully, A. GALLATIN TALBOT, Sr.

The Public Library.

When Demetrius Phalerus, the Librarian of the great Ptolemy, informed the royal bibliophile that he had collected 500,000 volumes into the imperial library, the King smiled approvingly upon him and surveyed the vast collection with undisturbed pleasure.

"Is there no other work of importance in the world," he asked.

"None save the sacred books of the Hebrews," said Demetrius. To obtain this work 100,000 Jews were set at liberty in one day. The volume was translated into Greek and placed upon the shelves. But all this vast accretion of literature was locked up from the masses. The royal master gloated over it. A few hierophants and literati gleamed the gold from the storehouse. A free public library is the institution of modern growth. The feeble efforts at the dissemination of knowledge in the past seem to have blossomed suddenly out like the leaves and flowers from a bleak hill side, under the influence of some sudden, fructifying sunlight. The reign of literary darkness is over, and the world of literature is suddenly thrown open to the people. Weak moralizers have spoken of the danger of giving people access to all shades of thought and doctrine.

They have argued that minds will be contaminated, that tastes will be vitiated. But such has not proved to be the case. The mind acts for itself, and chooses its own food. In literature there is an antidote for every poison, just as the mineral world. Reading is the great educator, and the readers among the people are the least vicious, nay, are the most virtuous. An era in the history of Louisville will be inaugurated on the 27th of this month.

A free, absolutely free, library will be thrown open to the public at that time, which will prove one of the most powerful means for the suppression of vice ever known in the city. Hitherto the vast number of young men employed in our stores and factories have had no door open to them save the door of the saloon, gambling hell, and house of shame. All honor, of course, to the churches which have stretched out a helping hand; but what many have needed is a proper place to pass the evening and sufficient healthful attraction to bind them to virtue.

The Public Library will show at the opening more than 20,000 volumes of carefully selected books, adapted to all tastes. Mr. Ben. Casseday, the Librarian, has classified and arranged them with careful judgment. His long experience in literary matters and intimate acquaintance with books and literary antiquities and curiosities gives him a remarkable adaptation for the position, and we believe all our citizens will be glad to see him in charge of this "literary world." The arrangement of the library is most admirable. The books are arranged in small alphabetical sections, and easy reference can be made to them from the catalogue.

The collection is rich in encyclopedias of every branch of learning, in standard historical works, histories of Kentucky, and other States. The religious works are very numerous, and there already exists the nucleus of a very valuable theological library. The theological student can find standard commentaries and works of Hall, Dwight, Prudden, Throckmold, Grieseler, Milford, Hagenbach, Hooker, Milman Spurgeon, Beecher, Pearson, Beth, &c.

The department of works on travel is quite extensive. The manners, customs, scenery, &c., of almost every nation, are represented in the works of the latest travelers.

We have before referred to the Children's Library, and other important features. Some rare and valuable works are upon shelves, as Boylde's Shakespeare, Finden's British Art Gallery, Catlin's Indian Gallery, in rich water colors, put on my hand.

We have frequently referred to Dr. Graham's valuable mineral land fossil collection. Here one can see remains from the first verterbrate existence of the Paleozoic age, to the later and more perfect developments; the minerals of the sphere, foliated carboniferous specimens, and a multitude of rare relics of the ages.

It is proposed to formally open the Library on next Saturday evening, with appropriate exercises, in Weisiger Hall. Hon. J. Proctor Knott will deliver an address, and Ben Casseday, Esq., will deliver a poem. A band of music will be in attendance. After the exercises in the Hall the library rooms will be thrown open, and the public can then enter and see for themselves what has been done by the trustees to carry out their promise of giving a free library to Louisville.

An interesting feature of the exercises in Weisiger Hall will be the presence of the survivors of the great epidemic of 1822. Seats will be reserved for them in front. Those persons will appear as the "Old Settlers of Louisville." All our citizens should be at the inauguration of this enterprise, which gives such promise for our future moral and intellectual welfare.

Colman's Rural World.

This practical farm family weekly is a regular visitor to our sanctum. It is one of the best established journals of its class in the West and Southwest. And it is acknowledged to be good authority on all matters pertaining to the subject of which it treats. It is practical in character, dignified in discussion and original in all its departments. Not a single number comes to our office that does not contain some useful suggestion that is worth more than the price of the paper. It is published every Saturday by Norman J. Colman, at St. Louis, Mo., at $2 per year.

The Mr. Sterling Sentinel says: "On Sunday evening, as Mrs. Quorill, daughter of Squire Steven Treadway, was attempting to correct her son John, a lad only twelve years old as to age, but several hundred years old in pure and unadulterated devilness, the little savage drew a knife and plunged it into her abdomen, producing a wound which resulted in her death. The boy's father is an Italian, and is now serving a term in the Missouri penitentiary."

The Louisville, Cincinnati, and Lexington Railroad has purchased the Louisville and Shelbyville Railroad (from Anchorage Station to Shelbyville, 18 miles) paying for the road $23,000 per mile, and assuming all the liabilities. Gen. St. John is surveying the route to Frankfort from Shelbyville.

On Monday night, the 15th inst., Graham Akin, a young man of Woodford county, formerly a resident of Danville, committed suicide at the residence of his mother by shooting himself through the left breast with a pistol. No cause is assigned for the rash act.

We are gratified to notice that work on the Lexington and Big Sandy Railroad is progressing rapidly. As a feeder to the grand trunk line of railway from the Big Sandy to Louisville by the way of Paris and Georgetown it will be quite valuable.
